Since 1973, the Asian Rural Institute (ARI) has been dedicated to training grassroots rural leaders, who live and work in their communities in countries located primarily in Asia, Africa and the Pacific.

Located in Tochigi, Japan, ARI trains rural community leaders regardless of nationality, race, religious beliefs, gender or age. The aim of the training is to facilitate the self-development of rural people, in order to build a more just and peaceful society.

The training is practically-oriented. Participants learn through classroom lectures, discussions and study tours, then put this learning into practice by managing their own fields and rice paddies, raising livestock, leading committees and organizing events.

The ARI community is almost completely self-sufficient, with more than 90 percent of the food consumed coming from its own campus.

ARI does not have an independent source of funds, but relies on the support of individuals, churches and funding organizations to operate the training program. Furthermore, since ARI actively seeks out people from the most marginalized areas of the world, who have few resources to support themselves for this training, ARI helps them to connect with potential supporters for scholarship assistance. Thus, ARI’s Rural Leaders Training Program is made possible by supporters’ generous contributions.
My parents were teachers and had a kitchen garden. My love of teaching and nature comes from them. I work with HIV/AIDS patients and want to help them have more healthy food and life. I also believe we need to educate and motivate youth to choose village life over urban life by teaching them to raise healthy food for themselves and for market. ARI can help me accomplish this goal.

I am the Coordinator of Rice Fields and Animal Care at the Agriculture Center of Claretian Missionaries, in Bena-Linarumtulu villages, West Timor (Indonesia). I distribute various kinds of crop seeds to farmers. I work to mobilize and empower farmers to improve soil quality, agricultural yields, and self-reliance. I want to increase farmers knowledge and help other agriculture centers in our ministry.

I have been a pastor in a remote area of Indonesia for 15 years. Since a large volcanic eruption disrupted people's ability to farm, I have been working to demonstrate new organic methods. Following ARI, I wish to train congregations with the knowledge and techniques they need to rebuild healthy and sustainable communities.

I am the co-founder and Executive Director of the Environmental Development Youth Movement, in the Have Volta region of Ghana. My focus is to teach the next generation how to care for the environment through sustainable practices and alternative livelihoods, such as nurseries and food crop cultivation for food security leading to self sufficiency.

I live in Osramanae, Ghana, and have been a successful farmer, working on my family farm with my wife and children. Our beekeeping group has 140 hives and I help care for and market the honey. I hope to learn to reduce poverty and increase employment, creating a model for other communities with my sweet skills of beekeeping and agriculture.

I have worked with Heifer International and Village Water Zambia to train farmers in integrated agriculture and to regularly monitor and evaluate project performance. I hope the ARI training will broaden my mind and enhance the knowledge I have in integrated agriculture to enable me to contribute effectively to rural development.

I live in rural Myanmar where we have poor roads, high altitude and travel great distances to attend training programs. I meet many villagers and help with spiritual matters and want to help their livelihood. Part of my work includes helping local farmers make natural fertilizer. After ARI I will train farmers in many areas the new techniques learned.

The people in my community practice shifting agriculture, and we need to change to something more sustainable. We need knowledge of the sustainable agriculture methods I will learn at ARI to make the change. As an ethnic minority, I want to develop more leadership skills so I can help my people unite and work together to improve our community.
I hope to establish a rural development center in my community. I train people in income generation, community development, and gender awareness. On return, I want to introduce organic techniques to my district and set up a training center.

As a staff member of the Women in Governance project of Action of Women in Development (AWID) in Manipur, India, I organize workshops to help women increase their advocacy and leadership skills. I look forward to learning more about sustainable agriculture, leadership, and development issues at ARI.

I work on our street children ministry and also care for the church garden with the community people. I have a clear plan of what I want to achieve. Although poor, my community has great resources. In my view, ARI shares the spirit of communality that I want to develop in my region, as well as providing practical training to help farmers understand and work with the riches they have around them.

I work with a village community across several villages in an undeveloped and remote area, where shifting and slash-burn farming results in lower productivity and contributes to poverty. I train people in income generation, community development, and gender awareness. On return, I hope to establish a rural development center in my community.

I am a Methodist pastor assigned to a circuit of five churches in Thummodara, Sri Lanka, where I also manage the Methodist Girls’ Home. I am involved in the environment movement and human rights work and give instruction and guidance to farmers. On my return from ARI, I want to introduce organic techniques to my district and set up a training center.

I am a Rural Services Officer and volunteer with the Visura Development Foundation to teach organic farming, cultivate multi-religious dialogue, and advocate for women’s food sovereignty. With the skills gained at ARI, I hope to spread knowledge, motivate local youth to work in agriculture, and better serve my community.

As the co-founder of Farming Partnerships Initiatives (FPI), I am responsible for improving agricultural productivity, food security, and rural livelihoods through small loans and training. I hope to share the leadership and farm management skills acquired at ARI with FPI and other organizations in the Kagera region.

I am a farmer and help serve my organization and community by cultivating food crops to feed the patients, workers, and community. I hope to learn more about improving crop yields and sustainable agricultural practices while at ARI.

Currently, I train women and low-income families in sound financial management. At ARI, I will focus on leadership and community building, as well as learning organic and sustainable farming techniques. I want my people to stop relying on chemical agricultural methods, so their families and the environment will be healthier.

A Japanese graduate of ARI is eligible to apply to be a GI. The internship is twelve months long, starting in April immediately after graduation from the previous training year. The intern focuses on one section of the farm in which he/she wishes to gain deeper understanding and more extensive experience. The GI also takes part in all other aspects of ARI life as an actively contributing community member.

After participating in 2015 ARI training program, I am happy to be returning as a graduate intern so that I may obtain more organic agricultural skills and knowledge and a greater ability to understand cultural differences and communication for my future when I continue my involvement in rural development.
After returning from ARI training in 1997, I became a pastor and helped start an NGO - Comprehensive Rural Economic Development Society, which deals with issues related to agriculture. I also founded farmers’ clubs to strengthen the knowledge and cooperation of rural farmers in Nagaland. Recently, the church and government have co-established informal village schools which are now attended by 80% of the local children. (1997 Graduate)

Ann
Ms. Annie Jane Lagawan
WAND Foundation, (Water, Agro-forestry, Nutrition and Development Foundation)
Sanitation Logistic Supervisor
As a livelihood manager, I help rural people understand organic farming by first encouraging those willing to try something new. After neighbors see and believe, they trust and try. Recently I facilitated building 11,000 latrines in villages flooded by Typhoon Haiyan. At ARI I want to learn more about community development. In addition, discover ways to integrate proper nutrition with my work in hygiene and sanitation. (2010 Graduate)

Macdonald
Rev. Fr. Macdonald Njala Banda
Anglican Diocese of Upper Shire
Executive Director, Chilema Ecumenical Training Center
I work primarily in a church-sponsored Lay Training Centre, which among other programs is women economic empowerment. As a TA, I will focus on gaining more skills in Graduate Outreach. When I return home I want to include women graduates from the existing training centre to build and expand empowerment programs at a local and small community level. (2010 Graduate)

The Graduates of ARI
After graduating from the ARI training program many Rural Leaders focus on sustainable agriculture in order to revive their communities, but that’s not all. Graduates engage in a broad range of causes, such as conservation of the environment, children’s education and microfinance. Others dedicate their lives to attain rights for women and tribal people, or organize aid for refugees. Responding thus, to the needs of grassroots people as Servant Leaders, they spread ARI’s spirit of “Living Together” across the world.
